Commentary

The country allocations of the portfolio were unchanged in January. The portfolio remained overweight to the United Kingdom, Hong Kong and the United States and underweight to Singapore, Japan, Continental Europe and Canada. For the month of January, the portfolio performed in line with its benchmark. Regional allocation results (allocation and currency, exclusive of cash and currency forwards) were positively impacted by an underweight position to Canada and an overweight position to Hong Kong. Stock selection results were flat as underperformance in the United States and Japan were offset by outperformance in Continental Europe and the United Kingdom. Currency hedging had a positive impact on relative performance this month.

Capital market assets rallied in January as the fears that drove end of year declines began to recede. Expectations for a resolution to the U.S.-China trade dispute have improved, the U.S. Federal Reserve took a much more dovish approach to future monetary policy and China's government is loosening policy, both fiscally and monetarily, all offering support to investor sentiment. At the same time, leading economic indicators continue to align with moderate levels of economic expansion, which should be sufficient to drive real estate demand. The potential for lower, but positive, levels of economic growth may favor assets with lower risk profiles, more durable cash flow streams, and solid growth prospects, benefitting the real estate asset class on a relative basis.

Given the current state of real estate fundamentals and the expectation for continued, albeit softer, economic expansion, LaSalle continues to expect solid earnings and dividend growth from REITs. Despite January's significant rally, global REITs continue to offer discounts to their historical trading range with the value of their underlying real estate or Net Asset Value, which has prompted events within the sector.
